Voting open for the 2009 Travel Blogger Awards

Matthew Cashmore
Lonely Planet author

The results are in, we've run the figures and we present the top five nominated blogs in each category.

You can vote for one blog in each category. Please do only vote once - we're sure there are ways you can get around the tech, but please, do only vote once. We reserve the right to remove votes we think are fraudulent - and remember - public voting will make up 50% of the overall score.

Voting will close at midday on Friday 20th March 2009 Pacific Time USA (San Francisco)

If you'd like to know how we'll be counting the votes and how the maths will work we've put up a special post explaining it all.

Cell based location tracking?

The ekit Travel Journal, automatically creates an online journal based on the location of your phone. It updates the location using cell phone towers in more than 100 countries. It's a free service feature on all ekit global SIM cards and works with any GSM phone, not just expensive smart phones.

Your trip is automatically displayed on a Google map and your journal is updated with images of locations you have visited, local weather and a record of recent communications. You can update and personalise your Journal anytime, either by phone or from the web.
